BACKGROUND

In 2000 few social scientists were traversing the length and breadth of India to research and map certain aspects of human culture and development with special focus on the indigenous communities settled in the East and North East States of India. Apart from witnessing interesting statistics, they had a numbing experience and were appalled to see the prevailing living conditions of the communities - abject poverty, illiteracy, sickness and child mortality, deprivation from basics of life, inequality in letter and spirit and a general sense of despair and hopelessness. It was all the more tragic and conscience-crippling considering the fact that the country was speeding towards 21st century and still many of the shocking situations seemed illogical, uncalled for and totally avoidable, but were man-made with their roots in ancient history and indifference of the few selfish people.

The scientist friends, then and there resolved to fight back and contribute in every possible way towards alleviation of the stark poverty and enhancement of quality of life of these lovable people saddled with social divisions and walls of disparity, inequality, untouchability and indignity. The zeal, a burning love for own fellow countrymen, a sense of commitment and at that moment they conceived the idea of a social platform through which they could work for upliftment of people from such communities. Taking inspiration from Dr Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar, who was one of the respected Leaders of independent India and who fought against the evils of caste system and inequality in the society, Majhipara Ambedkar Centre for Human Research and Development was formed and registered as a not-for-profit Non-Government Organisation under the Society's Act 1961 on 10th January 2005. And there has been no looking back ever since. The trust takes pride in working for disadvantaged people by restoring their confidence so that they could lead a dignified life, thus re-imposing their faith in the founding principles of this great nation. MACHRD preaches the principle of inclusive growth within the society, inline with the vision of founding fathers of our country, with an aim to unleash the underutilized potential of less privileged people so that socio-economic development can be achieved in true sense.
